Esatto launches an induction cooktop with Power Phase technology to allow for an economical upgrade to induction cooking.

Esatto, proudly known for fuss-free appliances that do exactly what they're meant to do, has announced the launch of its latest product: the 60cm Induction Cooktop with Power Phase ECI604T. This new cooktop delivers precise and efficient cooking with a sleek design that complements any modern kitchen while only operating on a maximum of 10 Amps.

As Australian consumers become increasingly aware of the environmental and health risks associated to gas cooktops, more and more people are looking at moving to induction cooktops but until now, the installation price of putting in more power has been a barrier. Traditionally induction cooktops require 15–30 Amps, whereas the ECI604T Power Phase technology ensures that a maximum of 10 Amps is distributed across the zones, depending on how many zones are in use at any given time. This intelligent system allows for the cooktop to be plugged into any 10 Amp power point, which is ideal for renovations or new homes.

“We are thrilled to introduce the Esatto 60cm Induction Cooktop with Power Phase ECI604T to our customers,” said Nicholas Cary, Marketing Manager at Residentia Group, the Australian company that designs, owns and distributes Esatto. “Featuring Power Phase technology, this cooktop makes it easier for any home cook to achieve efficient and professional cooking in their own kitchens, regardless of how much power they currently have installed. With the cost of living rising, it is now more important than ever to make the swap to induction more economical and allow customers to save on gas bills.”

The ECI604T features four cooking zones with individual timers and touch controls, making it easy to cook multiple dishes at once. The cooktop's surface is made from high-quality ceramic glass, making it durable and easy to clean. The cooktop also includes a range of safety features, such as a child lock, residual heat indicators and auto-safety switch off, to give you peace of mind while cooking.

The Esatto 60cm Induction Cooktop with Power Phase ECI604T is available now from Bunnings. The cooktop comes with a 2-year warranty which can be extended to 3 years for free by registering online.
